This one shows the new pointed yoke on the skirt with a playted roke also on the blouse, and the skirt includes plaits at the sides, which ment flare and fulness. The shield may be made high or low and there is the regulation opening beneath the tie. In the picture the material is navy blue serge and the collar, cuffs and shield are mode of white broadcloth, banded with lifue. Such combinations are much liked and the color always is a standard one, but charming costumes of the sort also are made in browns, reds and the like as well as in blue, and while serge and gabardine are favorite materials. there are others that are in every way appropriate. Here the year is finished with eyelets and laced together at the eides, and unquestionably the effect is a good one, but it is not necessary, and comme could take the place of the lacings if desired. The blouse may be made long enough to extend well over the hips and worn loose, or it may be cut shorter and finished with a bem and a draw string or elastic, as it is on the with a stock collar or low and collariess. pital.
